Hackers Release Sony Pictures' GC's Emails

Guardians of Peace, the hacking group responsible for obtaining and then leaking thousands of pieces of confidential Sony information, has released the email of Sony Pictures General Counsel Leah Weil.

The nature of the majority of the documents is highly sensitive, according to a report on Gizmodo.com.

An email exchange between Weil and the president of Columbia Pictures' business affairs carried the subject line "email purge." The executives discussed the need for Sony to take a more cautious approach to email retention policies and whether they should move to a more secure system.

The emails also disclosed squabbles with writer-producer Aaron Sorkin, net neutrality confusion, and a host of conflicts within the company itself.

Read the story.