

Hogan Lovells Northern Virginia Office Moves to Boro Tower

Hogan Lovells Northern Virginia office has officially moved to the Boro Tower at 8350 Broad Street in Tysons.

The firm said the new 20-story trophy Boro Tower is built on the highest point in Fairfax County, and the Hogan Lovells office is on the 17th and 16th floors. The Gensler-designed space features floor-to-ceiling glass throughout the virtually column free floors, a contemporary conference center, backlit glass walls, and an open floor plan to enhance the Hogan Lovells collaborative work environment.

The firm's Northern Virginia office has more than 60 employees, including more than 40 lawyers.

As part of the move, Hogan Lovells Northern Virginia office is also donating six truck-loads of conference room and office furniture, as well as computer equipment, to Legal Services of Northern Virginia, the firm said.