

Selling Your Product or Service Into China: The Contract Basics

Dan Harris of China Law Blog has published a sample email that addresses many of the key points a company should be thinking about if it is contemplating selling into China.

The sample is an email (with identifiers removed) from a China attorney to a client, written to gather sufficient information to create a first draft of a product sales agreement for the sale of a product from an American company to a host of Chinese automobile companies.

The email covers such issues as the product, price terms, payments terms, shipping terms, scheduling and timing, facility, subcontractors and component suppliers, packaging and labeling, molds and tooling, quality control, warranty, general service, intellectual property, dispute resolution, and other special matters.

Read the article.