

Texas Law Firm With 80-Year History Is Disbanding

The Fort Worth Star-Telegram is reporting that Shannon Gracey Ratliff & Miller, one of Fort Worth's storied law firms for more than 80 years, is shutting down at the end of the year, according to court records.

"The partners recently voted to dissolve at the end of 2016, and several of its attorneys are leaving to join other firms or start new ones, according to court records and interviews with those familiar with the situation," reports Max B. Baker.

Some Shannon Gracey lawyers already have formed new firms or joined other Texas firms. The firm's website lists about 30 lawyers now, with offices in Fort Worth, Dallas, Arlington, Austin, Houston and Rhome.
