

Wall Street Penalties Have Fallen in Trump's First Year, Study Says

Jay Clayton

In its latest fiscal year, Wall Street's top regulator sought the smallest amount of penalties since 2013, a drop that took place as the agency went months without permanent leadership and could show a softer approach to policing wrongdoing, Bloomberg reports.

"The U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission tried to obtain $3.4 billion in fines and disgorgement from companies and individuals during the 12 months ended in September, according to data collected by Urska Velikonja, a Georgetown University law professor," write reporters Matt Robinson and Benjamin Bain. "The SEC filed 612 enforcement cases, also the fewest in four years, Velikonja's research shows."

Velikonja points out that since Jay Clayton – the former Wall Street deals lawyer appointed by Trump – took over as SEC chair in May, the agency has pursued just two sanctions against large financial firms. But in the same period a year earlier, more than a dozen big financial companies faced SEC sanctions.
