5 Ways to Clarify and Strengthen U.S. Cybersecurity Law

While most corporate counsels are still trying to figure out what the Cybersecurity Act of 2015 (CSA) does for them, Rob Knake, a Senior Fellow for Cyber Policy at the Council on Foreign Relations, discusses five ways the U.S. Congress can make the law better during 2016.

He wrote the article for Defense One.

In the article, he provides details on his five suggestions: Antitrust may have gone too far (or not far enough), whether Internet Service Providers are "information systems," benefits of letting the Department of Defense establish information sharing programs with defense companies, classified sharing requires a classified network, and It may undermine sharing.

Read the article.