

America's No. 2 Biglaw Firm Finally Gets on Board with Vaccination for All

"COVID-19's Delta variant has really changed what the legal landscape will look like this fall. Dozens of large law firms were hoping for a safe reopening of their offices, but now their proposed restart dates are being pushed back and vaccine mandates are on the table at firms across the country to stop," reports Staci Zaretsky in Above The Law.

"Some firms have taken longer than others to make a move on the vaccination front. It was just last week that Dentons, the world's largest law firm,` decided to announce a mandatory vaccination policy for all U.S. employees. Now, it looks like another Biglaw heavyweight has officially opted in for vaccination for all employees."
