Are Today's Corporate Directors More Personally Liable?

Now more than ever, corporate directors are finding themselves named in lawsuits, says Katherine Henderson, veteran insurance board advisor and partner with Wilson Sonsini, in a video posted by Boardroom Resources LLC.

"Today, any major decision from the company or board level seems to result in some form of legal action," Boardroom Resources says on its website. "All this increased litigation begs the question – what's the level of personal liability for directors on public boards and how can their liability be mitigated?"

In the video, Henderson discusses the current state of board liability, along with what you need to know about your D&O policy. She also outlines what steps to take to mitigate your risk of being sued.

Watch the on-demand video.