

Arsenal Executive James King Joins PFA as General Counsel

“Arsenal executive James King is set to be announced as the Professional Footballers’ Association’s general counsel, The Athletic understands. King had been employed by Arsenal since 2016 where he worked on commercial deals for their legal team before moving to their football operations department in,” reports David Ornstein in The Athletic.

“His most recent title at the Emirates Stadium was senior legal counsel for football operations. He was also a member of the FA’s legal and governance group for women’s football. King worked with Arsenal’s men’s, women’s and academy teams during his most recent years at the north London club. The PFA, the world’s oldest profession.”

Read the article.