

AT&T Wants to Buy Time Warner To 'Weaponize' Its Content, Government Says in Antitrust Trial

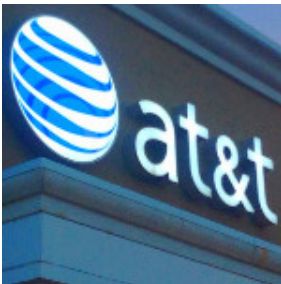

Image by Mike Mozart

The biggest U.S. antitrust case of this century kicked into high gear Thursday as a government lawyer warned that AT&T Inc. wants to buy media giant Time Warner Inc. to “weaponize” its must-have content – a move that would raise prices for consumers and hinder innovation, according to the Los Angeles Times.

In opening arguments, Justice Department lawyer Craig Conrath said AT&T could use Time Warner’s content as a weapon against competitors that rely on the programming.

Reporter Jim Puzzanghera writes: “AT&T’s added leverage over pay-TV competitors to withhold content from some of the most valuable assets in entertainment – including HBO, CNN, TBS, TNT and Warner Bros., Hollywood’s largest TV and film studio – would cause prices to rise by more than $400 million a year for Americans, Conrath said.”

Read the LA Times article.

