

Big Law Attorneys Share Why Mentoring Matters: Part Three

“In the third part of our Why Mentoring Matters series, two female partners at large law firms write about their personal journeys and how mentoring or being mentored has played an important and positive role in their careers. Morgan Lewis & Bockius labor and employment partner Debra,” reports MP McQueen in their Bloomberg Law.

“Her lack of a female mentor as a young attorney inspired her to become a mentor to others, especially women. She relates how she had no role models to guide her when she returned from maternity leave at another firm in the 1990s. That, and her discovery that she had been excluded from male partners’ get-togethers, forced her to create.”
