

Biglaw Firm Boosts Salaries for the Third Time this Year, But

“How badly does your firm want to compete in the white-hot lateral market? For some firms, the answer can be evidenced in its compensation. Did your firm raise salaries once this year? Great, a lot of firms did that. But did your firm raises salaries twice this year? Eh, probably not, only a few did,” reports Staci Zaretsky in Above The Law.

“Did your firm raise salaries three times this year? Only two firms that we know of can say that they did, and one of them did it earlier this week. As noted above, this firm has bumped associate salaries three times thus far in 2021... but it still hasn't quite reached the $205K starting salary that associates have long been dreaming of which firm.”

Read the article.