

Biglaw Firm Expands with New D.C. Office, Focusing on Antitrust and Trade

“Yesterday, Fenwick announced they’re opening a new Washington office, their sixth in the U.S., and that location will a focus on the antitrust and trade needs of their clients. At the office’s launch, partners Thomas Ensign formerly of Freshfields and Melissa Duffy formerly of Dechert will be joining,” reports Kathryn Rubino in Above The Law.

“Skadden Arps Slate Meagher & Flom earlier this month. Ensign works with technology and life sciences clients and works on pre-merger notification requirements in U.S. and international jurisdictions. Duffy’s practice focuses on international trade matters, including those related to trade controls and national security requirements for.”
