

Biglaw Partner Takes to Begging Associates to Come to the Office

“Every Biglaw firm hell, most employers, regardless of industry is trying to figure out exactly what post COVID work looks like. Because, while remote work got us through, it’s unclear exactly how much of that will be in our future. One Biglaw partner has taken to sending pleas to attorneys asking them,” reports Kathryn Rubino in Above The Law.

“Charles Chuck Palmer is the managing partner of Troutman Pepper’s Atlanta office. And he’d really, Really like folks to be back in the office. He links it to building the firm’s culture, and assures everyone that associates are MORE than just billing machines. We talk a lot about our firm’s culture about how we like each other and care.”
