

Boris Liberman Joins Lowenstein Sandler's Investment Management Group as Partner

Lowenstein Sandler has announced that Boris Liberman has joined the firm as partner in the Investment Management group.

Liberman provides strategic advice to U.S. and international hedge funds, mutual funds, CITs, UCITS, managed accounts, superannuation plans, sovereign wealth funds, and other asset owners regarding all aspects of investment strategy implementation across asset classes globally.

Before joining the firm, Liberman served as Senior Counsel for 12 years at AQR Capital Management LLC, where he counseled the trading, research, compliance, portfolio implementation, and business development teams. From his years in-house at this global investment management firm, as well as his time in private practice representing funds and private equity clients, Liberman has acquired wide-ranging experience in dealing with all aspects of investment strategy implementation, encompassing all types of activity and structures.

Liberman has specialized knowledge of relevant rules and regulations impacting trading documentation globally, including in key emerging markets such as China, Brazil, Saudi Arabia, India, Turkey, and Russia. He provides counsel to investment managers and asset owners who wish to access these markets across various investment instruments.

Earlier in his career, Liberman represented private equity firms and hedge funds at the global law firms of Linklaters LP and Katten Muchin Rosenman. LLP.

He holds a J.D. from New York Law School and a B.S from Yeshiva University. He is fluent in Russian.
