Bradley Welcomes Jennifer Morrison Ersin as Counsel in the Construction Practice Group

Bradley Arant Boult Cummings LLP is pleased to announce that Jennifer Morrison Ersin has joined the firm as counsel in the Construction Practice Group.

Ersin represents clients in arbitrations in all sectors, including construction, natural resources and agribusiness. She focuses on managing disputes arising from large-scale infrastructure projects and has assisted with environmental land loss and contamination litigations. Her experience includes determining case strategy, preparing substantive filings, liaising with arbitral institutions, assisting witnesses and experts with testimony, cross-examining witnesses and experts, and giving oral arguments at arbitration hearings in cases arising from sovereign states' breaches of investment treaties and infrastructure agreements.

Ersin earned her J.D. from Columbia Law School and her A.B. from Georgetown University.

Bradley was named the nation's "Law Firm of the Year" for Construction Law in the 2020 and 2018 editions of U.S. News & World Report – Best Lawyers "Best Law firms." The award is particularly significant since only one law firm in the United States per legal practice area receives this recognition each year. The Construction Practice Group was also named a 2020 Practice Group of the Year by Law360. Attorneys in the firm's Construction Practice Group counsel clients on projects in the United States, Canada and Mexico, as well as more than 35 countries across Europe, Asia, Africa, Australia, the Middle East, the Caribbean, and South America. Many of the firm’s construction attorneys have degrees in engineering, building science or architecture and have previous practical experience working in the construction industry.
