

Britney's New Lawyer Calls Out Biglaw Firm in Bid to End Conservatorship

"After years locked in a conservatorship, Britney Spears has a new lawyer and an opportunity to get out of the arrangement that she says leaves her with a meager stipend and involuntarily stuck on birth control. Mathew Rosengart, a former Souter clerk from the justice's days," reports Joe Patrice in Above the Law.

"New Hampshire bench, represents Britney in the fight now and just filed a 120-page petition to remove her father as sole conservator. The petition alleges Jamie Spears paid himself $16,000 a month more than Britney is allowed to make and took percentages from Britney's deals as if he were a manager or agent, despite performing."

Read the article.