Businesses Still Wary of Cloud Technologies

While there may be an array of cloud technologies available to businesses, not all companies are embracing those services, new research shows.

Business News Daily reports that just 33 percent of companies are moving “full steam ahead” with their cloud services plans, according to a study from the Cloud Security Alliance. More than 40 percent of businesses are adopting cloud technology, but with caution; 15 percent are still in the early stages of investigating what’s out there; and 11 percent aren’t placing much of a priority on them, the survey found.

Security of data is the top concern, with 73 percent of businesses saying it’s their biggest cloud challenge.

Read the story.