

Carrington Coleman Adds to Family Law, Health Care Practices

Firm welcomes new partners, associates to Dallas office

DALLAS – Family law attorney Whitney Keltch Green and health care attorney Wade Emmert have joined Carrington, Coleman, Sloman & Blumenthal, LLP as partners in the firm's Dallas office.

A passionate advocate for clients facing personal turmoil, Green has developed a practice based on creative solutions in matters involving divorce, child custody/support disputes, adoptions, premarital agreements, modifications, enforcements, and complex property disputes. Her work also focuses on unique legal questions involving children, including parental alienation, grandparents' rights, special needs, and addiction and mental health concerns.

Her work has earned recognition from the Best Lawyers in America in Family Law for 2020 and 2021, D Magazine's Best Lawyers Under 40, and Thomson Reuters' Texas Rising Stars. She also holds a 10.0 "superb" rating from AVVO.com. Green is also the President of the Dallas Association of Young Lawyers.

Emmert is a board-certified Health Law attorney with more than 25 years of experience representing Texas practitioners and hospitals, including complex health care transactions and regulatory compliance matters.

Emmert also serves as an adjunct professor at the Texas A&M University School of Law where he teaches courses on Health Care Transactions and Antitrust, and Health Care Fraud and Abuse. He has been recognized on Thomson Reuters' Texas Super Lawyers listing and among the top 1 percent of America's Most Honored Professionals.

Also joining the firm are associates Dorlin Armijo, Stephanie Assi and Abbye West. Armijo and Assi join the firm's Litigation practice group. West's practice focuses on Family Law.
