China Manufacturing Contracts: Ensuring Good Product

Harris & Moure's China Law Blog has a new article on what it takes to have a China contract that works – extolling the virtues of foreign companies having appropriate contracts with their Chinese manufacturers.

The article explains that "protection from China product problems rests on three legs: One, choosing the right partner. Two, having a China-specific contract. And, three, quality control monitoring. All three are important. Once you have a problem, the contract is the only thing that can save you, but to prevent the problem, all three are crucial."

Some real-world examples illustrate the proper way to deal with Chinese manufacturing deals.
