

Contract Lawyer Described as 'Superb Advocate' is Suspended for Overbilling State Public Defender

"An Iowa lawyer described as a 'superb advocate' has been suspended for overbilling the state public defender for her legal services and car mileage," reports Debra Cassens Weiss in ABA Journal's Daily News.

"Lawyer Jennifer Meyer was well regarded, but her billing practices require a one-year suspension, the Iowa Supreme Court ruled in a May 15 opinion."

"Meyer provided services to the state public defender as a contract attorney. She billed the agency for more than 24 hours in a day on 30 different days, according to an audit spanning four years. During the same period, Meyer had duplicated reimbursement requests for mileage, attributing trips to a location to multiple clients 147 times."

"Before the grievance commission, Meyer consistently argued that she did the legal work and was entitled to payment, despite billing irregularities. She often worked beyond customary hours and on weekends, she said."
