

3 Ways the Practice of Corporate Law is Changing

An article posted by ContractRoom looks at three principal ways the practice of corporate law is being transformed.

“In the past decade or so, the rise of high internet speeds, collaborative business technologies and ubiquitous system access via the cloud have all combined to elevate the way deals get done in business – including the role and placement of corporate law in this process,” the article says.

The article discusses models for business, legal technology, and new roles within legal practice.

Read the article.