

Corporate Lawyer in U.S. College Admissions Scandals Gets Two-Year Law License Suspension

"The former co-chairman of a major New York law firm has been suspended from practicing law for two years after pleading guilty and spending time in prison over his role in the U.S. college admissions scandal," reports Nate Raymond in Reuters' U.S. News.

"Gordon Caplan, who had been co-chairman at Willkie Farr & Gallagher, avoided disbarment despite his efforts to avoid "getting caught," according to a Thursday decision by a New York appellate court imposing the suspension."
