Dallas Law Firm Gardner Haas Adds Litigator Jeremy Camp as Partner

- The trial law firm Gardner Haas PLLC has added experienced commercial litigator Jeremy Camp as a partner.

Camp joins Gardner Haas from Dallas' Brewer Attorneys & Counselors, formerly Bickel & Brewer, where Gardner Haas' co-founders Michael Gardner and Eric Haas previously practiced. Camp's litigation and arbitration practice focuses on a variety of complex commercial matters, including merger and acquisition-related disputes, business torts, hospitality law and environmental litigation.

"Jeremy has extensive litigation and arbitration experience and his forward-thinking philosophy aligns with ours," says Gardner. "He's an extremely talented lawyer and we are excited he is joining our team."

Camp has tried several notable cases before judges and juries, including obtaining a take-nothing judgment in federal court for his client, 3M Co., in a dispute concerning the sale of an $854 million business.

"I have great respect for Michael and Eric and share their vision of solving clients' problems through exceptional work at a value that the big firms can't match," says Camp. "I look forward to adding to the depth of Gardner Haas."

Camp received his law degree, magna cum laude, from Southern Methodist University Dedman School of Law in 2009. He received a Bachelor of Science from the University of Texas at Austin in 2006.
