

Dealing with Hidden Assets in a Collaborative Divorce

“People choose Collaborative Divorce over traditional litigation when they want the divorce to be more amicable. The hallmark of a Collaborative Divorce is honesty,” writes Ron Anfuso in Collaborative Divorce California’s blog.

“Both spouses are expected to provide full disclosure about all assets, both those known to be community property and those that they claim are separate property. In rare cases during the collaborative process, one party discovers the other is hiding assets. The consequences to the dishonest person may be great.”

Read the article.