Deutsche Bank Lawyer Found Dead in New York Suicide

The Wall Street Journal is reporting that a senior Deutsche Bank lawyer, Calogero Gambino, has died of an apparent suicide in New York.

Gambino was an associate general counsel, a managing director and the German bank for 11 years.

Police says his wife found him on Oct. 20 hanging by the neck from a stairway banister. New York City Office of Chief Medical Examiner spokeswoman Julie Bolcer said the cause of death is hanging and manner of death is suicide.

On behalf of Deutsche, Gambino had been negotiating in an investigation into manipulation of the London interbank offered rate, or Libor, as well as in investigations into manipulation of currencies markets.

Read the story.