

Dish Network Sued for Patent Infringement

Cedar Lane Technologies filed a complaint for patent infringement against Dish Network alleging infringed patents-in-suit through its Movies for Purchase feature, reports Kirsten Errick in Law Street Media's Tech.

"The patents relate to playback of network audio on demand, creating and managing playlists, management of owned and unowned inventory, and translating a device command."

"Dish Network purportedly infringed the '443 patent by "making, using, offering to sell, selling and/or importing" its exemplary accused products, such as its Movies for Purchase feature as part of the Video on Demand menu."
