

Disney Fires Back Against Scarlett Johansson's Black Widow Lawsuit

"Disney has filed a motion to have Scarlett Johansson's lawsuit against the company moved to private arbitration, the latest in the ongoing saga of her complaint against the company over Black Widow's streaming release. Disney's lawyers filed the motion Friday in Los Angeles Superior Court on the grounds," reports Catie Keck in The Verge.

"Periwinkle Entertainment, which negotiated her deal, agreed that any claims related to her role in the Marvel film would be handled in confidential arbitration. But the motion also took several swipes at Johansson's complaint that argued Marvel, compelled by its parent company Disney, breached an agreement when Black Widow debuted."
