

Dodgers Renewed Contracts For Andrew Toles & Matt Beaty

“The Los Angeles Dodgers completed the majority of their offseason transactions after they signed Freddie Freeman and Tyler Anderson, but the club still had some contracts to sort out. The first three came last Tuesday when the Dodgers avoided arbitration with Trea Turner, Julio Urias and Caleb,” reports Blake Williams in Dodger Blue.

“By signing them all to one-year deals. Bellinger, who was also arbitration-eligible, signed a one-year contract prior to the MLB lockout. The next day was the deadline for teams to renew the contracts of players who are not eligible for arbitration but still remain under team control. If a team chose not to renew their contract, the player.”

Read the article.