

Entry-Level Lawyers Are Now Making $200,000 a Year

“Salaries for junior lawyers are rising above $200,000 at many top law firms for the first time, following a year of record-breaking profits in the legal industry and competition to retain a workforce that has billed long hours at home during the pandemic,” reports Sara Randazzo in The Wall Street Journal

“Corporate law firms are unique among businesses in that they typically increase pay in tandem, with a few market leaders triggering moves throughout the industry.”

Read the article.