

Expanding Medical Marijuana Laws: Current Policies and Implications

✖ The Network for Public Health Law has made available a complimentary on-demand webinar providing an overview of the current public health and legal landscape of medical marijuana.

On its website, The Network for Public Health Law says 21 states and Washington, D.C., have legalized medical marijuana and eight other states are considering legislation in 2014. As medical marijuana laws expand, state governments and health departments have the daunting task of developing and implementing rules and regulations.

This webinar provides an overview of the current public health and legal landscape of medical marijuana; examines patient registries, product testing, adolescent use, drugged driving and other health and policy concerns; and explores the evaluation of current laws and possible evidence-based strategies to protect public health, the Network says.
