Reducing E-Discovery Costs without Sacrificing Defensibility

Exterro has published a new white paper that features e-discovery insights by Aaron Crews, Head of E-Discovery at Walmart, along with other e-discovery experts, on creating a defensible, yet cost-effective process.

The company says the complimentary white paper discusses how to leverage the recent FRCP amendments to save money, how to develop new e-discovery techniques that reduce e-discovery spend but keep your process "reasonable," and how e-discovery search/collection/review technology should fit into your process.
