

Exxxotica: Dallas Officials Knew What They Were Getting When They Approved Porn Expo

Just days after the city of Dallas filed an R-rated defense of the City Council's vote to ban Exxxotica from the city-owned convention center, the porn expo has fired back that Dallas officials knew exactly what they were getting when they took the porn expo's $28,080 last year, writes Robert Wilonsky for The Dallas Morning News.

The porn expo's response is in response to a March 25 Dallas filing, which claimed Exxxotica's organizers misrepresented the amount of nudity and sexually oriented activity that would take place during Exxxotica's first event at the Kay Bailey Hutchison Convention Center last August. "As far as Dallas' attorneys are concerned, broken promises to keep women (mostly) clothed trump Exxxotica's allegations that the City Council trampled its First Amendment rights when it voted to ban the event two months ago," reports Wilonsky.

U.S. District Judge Sidney Fitzwater will hear Exxxotica's motion for a preliminary injunction on April 18.
