

FBI General Counsel Dana Boente to Retire from Bureau

"FBI General Counsel Dana Boente announced his retirement from the bureau," reports Brooke Singman in Fox Wilmington's Politics.

"Dana J. Boente, a longtime federal prosecutor, announced he will retire from his post as FBI general counsel by the end of June."

"The circumstances of his departure are not clear. NBC News first reported on Boente's retirement, saying he was asked to resign and citing pressure from the Justice Department over the FBI's handling of the case against former National Security Adviser Michael Flynn."
