

Female Attorneys Harassed at Big and Small Firms, Survey Shows

Bloomberg Law reports on a survey of mostly female lawyers that sexual harassment, including unwelcome texts, physical contact and bullying, exists at big and small law firms.

The Women's Bar Association of Massachusetts and the Rikleen Institute for Strategic Leadership conducted the study.

"Nearly 38 percent of respondents said they'd been the recipient of an unwanted sexual email, text or instant message at work. Approximately 21 percent said they'd experienced or witnessed unwelcome physical contact at work," reported Stephanie Russell-Kraft. "More than two-thirds of those who said they had experienced or witnessed unwelcome physical contact said they didn't report it."
