

Are You a Government Subcontractor?

Just because your company does not contract directly with the government does not necessarily mean you are not subject to the many requirements associated with government contractors, warns Foley & Lardner in a new article.

“Those who provide goods and services to OEMs, or other customers who sell to the government, may also be subject to those requirements,” the article says.

“Many government contractors incorporate by reference Federal Acquisition Regulation (“FAR”) clauses, FAR agency supplemental clauses, or other federal government contracting laws and regulations into agreements with subcontractors and materials supplier.”

Read the article.