Foley & Lardner Adds Jason and Teresa as Partners in Washington, D.C.

Foley and Lardner LLP has expanded its litigation team with the addition of Jason Levine and Teresa Taylor as partners in the firm’s Washington, D.C., office.

Levine joins the firm’s Antitrust and Competition Practice Group, bringing nearly 30 years of experience in antitrust and commercial litigation. Before joining Foley, he led the Washington, D.C., office of global litigation finance firm Omni Bridgeway.

He held senior roles at multinational law firms. His background includes managing billion-dollar business disputes, securing over $3 billion in relief for plaintiffs, and helping defendants avoid more than $17 billion in liability.

Taylor becomes part of Foley’s Government Enforcement Defense and Investigations Practice Group. Her practice focuses on trade sanctions, export controls, and regulatory defense.

She previously served at Taft Stettinius & Hollister LLP, representing clients in investigations involving federal agencies such as the Department of Justice and the Securities and Exchange Commission. Her work spans national security, foreign corruption, and financial compliance.
