Former DOJ Prosecutor Jerrob Duffy Joins Hogan Lovells as Partner

Jerrob Duffy, former Chief of the Litigation Unit in the U.S. Department of Justice's Criminal Fraud Section, has joined Hogan Lovells as a partner in its Investigations, White Collar, and Fraud practice in Washington, D.C.

Duffy brings over two decades of experience as a federal prosecutor and, most recently, practiced at Squire Patton Boggs, where he led financial services regulatory defense work. At Hogan Lovells, he will focus on representing clients in civil and criminal enforcement matters, with a particular emphasis on the commercial lending sector.

His arrival enhances the firm's capacity to handle investigations and litigation involving securities and commodities violations, healthcare and accounting fraud, sanctions breaches, and compliance under the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act and the False Claims Act. He has led more than 20 federal jury trials and worked closely with key U.S. regulators, including the SEC, CFTC, and FinCEN.

Firm leaders described his hiring as part of a broader strategy to strengthen Hogan Lovells' litigation and regulatory footprint, particularly in financial services.

Duffy holds a J.D. from the University of North Carolina, an M.P.A. from Princeton, and an LL.M. from the University of Cape Town.

About the Hogan Lovells Washington, D.C. office

Since 1904, our lawyers in the nation's capital have been instrumental in helping clients resolve their most difficult commercial, regulatory, and legal obstacles.

Hogan Lovells' Washington, D.C. office is the firm's largest office in the United States, with over 500 lawyers spanning all three of the firm's practice groups. These groups include Corporate & Finance, Global Regulatory and IP, and Litigation, Arbitration and Employment.

We operate at the intersection of business and government, with a deep understanding of how geopolitics, political risks, and regulatory issues affect clients across numerous key sectors.