

Former Partner Hits Jones Day With Gender Bias Suit

Bloomberg Law is reporting that a former partner in Jones Day's Silicon Valley office alleged in a suit June 19 that she was kicked out of the firm after raising concerns about its treatment of female lawyers.

The former partner, Wendy Moore, alleged that the firm's leaders retaliated against her after she voiced misgivings about the firm's alleged sexist culture, lack of pay transparency, and marginalization of female attorneys, according to reporter Stephanie Russell-Kraft.

"The firm's male leaders often make sexist comments and rate the attractiveness of female attorneys, paralegals, staff, and officers of the firm's clients," Moore's complaint says. "Business development events, too, often center on degrading stereotypes of femininity and cater to a preference for sports and alcohol."
