

Former Practice Chair Says Dentons Owes Her Over $390K

Bloomberg Law reports that the former chair of Dentons government contracts practice group claims that the firm owes her more than $390,000, but the firm has fired back, saying she owes the firm almost $2 million in client fees.

Jessica Abrahams, now at Drinker Biddle & Reath, claims Dentons breached a contract that guaranteed she'd have the funds in her capital account returned to her if she left the firm.

Dentons responded in a statement that when Abrahams left, "Dentons was owed more than $1.8 million from her clients and those fees and costs largely remain outstanding today."
