Cravath Veteran Rebecca Rettig Joins FisherBroyles as Partner

Rebecca Rettig has joined FisherBroyles, LLP, as a partner in the firm's New York office. Rettig is a partner in the firm's Litigation department, as well as a member of the Fintech and Blockchain practice group.

In a release, the firm said Rettig is the latest attorney to join FisherBroyles from Cravath, Swaine & Moore LLP, where she practiced for more than eight years.

Rettig's litigation practice involves securities, shareholder derivative, general commercial, contract disputes, copyright and trademark disputes, employment disputes, insurance coverage, and auditor and accountant liability. She has served as trial counsel in cases and arbitrations around the country, and has represented Fortune 100 companies, large financial institutions, major airlines, pharmaceutical companies, technology companies, private equity funds, and hedge funds, as well as startups and emerging companies.

In the blockchain and cryptocurrency space, Rettig represents and advises clients in matters relating to U.S. regulations, intellectual property, trade secrets and contracts, as well as offering and trading practices. Her work in this area also involves litigation, arbitration, and other forms of dispute resolution. Rettig is a frequent speaker on legal and regulatory matters relating to blockchain and cryptocurrency.

Recognized this year by Crain's New York Business as one of the top 100 women lawyers in New York City, Rettig received her J.D. from Columbia Law School, her Master of Science from the London School of Economics, and her Bachelor of Arts from Stanford University.
