

Jennifer Adams joins Hogan Lovells from Koch in Texas

Jennifer Adams has joined Hogan Lovells' Houston office as a partner in its Environment and Natural Resource practice. Adams joins the firm from Koch Companies Public Sector, where she has served as chief counsel of litigation for the last eight years.

"We are delighted that Jennifer has agreed to join Hogan Lovells," said Bruce Oakley, office managing partner in Hogan Lovells Houston Office. "We expect her arrival to create an immediate impact on our environmental practice in Texas."

In a release, Adams has experience handling environmental litigation and commercial disputes. She has spent the last eight years focusing on complex environmental matters throughout the U.S., including in air, water, and soil disputes, indemnification issues, and other environmental events.

"Jennifer is well-known in her field, and we have known and worked with her for many years," said Adam Kushner, co-head of Hogan Lovells' Environmental and Natural Resource Practice. "We have witnessed first-hand Jennifer's strong work ethic and attention to detail. Jennifer has a keen sense of what's important to clients, and is a great asset to our global team."

The firm said Adams has experience in leading large teams of lawyers focused on environmental matters that involve the complex interplay between legal, regulatory, commercial, governmental, and public stakeholders. Prior to her role at Koch, Adams spent the first nine years of her legal career at Baker Botts. She received her B.A. from Stephen F. Austin State University in 1999, and her J.D. from Baylor Law School in 2002.
