

Patent Trolls v. Transportation Companies – Contract Tips to Help Avoid Paying the Toll

Transportation companies have become prime targets for patent infringement lawsuits in recent years, write Jonathan Todd and Justin P. Clark for Benesch, Friedlander, Coplan & Aronoff.

“The best way a transportation and logistics provider can protect itself from the license fees, court costs, and damages is to carefully negotiate the technology agreements that support hardware and software license, lease, or development,” they explain.

In their article, they discuss technology contract tips, offering the most important user-favorable clauses that can often help protect the buyer or licensee of technology.

Read the article.