International Manufacturing Contracts: Why Templates Are a No-Go

Dan Harris, a founder of Harris Bricken and lead writer of the China Law Blog, discusses why he sometimes has to explain to companies why he never does "template" manufacturing agreements anywhere in the world and why they should not want such an agreement.

The blog post includes part of an email a lawyer in his firm wrote to an international manufacturer, illustrating why an off-the-shelf manufacturing cannot work and makes no sense, even in a rush situation.

Read the article.