New York State Takes the Lead to Settle International Contract Disputes

New York State has taken steps to smooth the often rough road for resolving international contract disputes, and parties are finding the new procedures comparatively easy to follow, according to post on the website of Daniel Kron.

He explains that "when international contracts have no forum selection clause, New York can be the only – or best – place to obtain personal jurisdiction. At the same time, given the relatively broad views of personal jurisdiction found in New York, foreign individuals may find they are taken to court in New York despite their desires."

Read the article.