

When it Comes to Contracting With the Federal Government: Beware

While at first glance, an engagement with the federal government may appear lucrative, the venture comes with many strings attached, and the cost of compliance with the rules can quickly outweigh the financial benefit of the contract itself, warns Jennifer S. Cluverius in an article on the website of Nexsen Pruet, LLC.

She writes that a lack of experience can lead a federal contractor or subcontractor can encounter these pitfalls.

The article discusses some of the most costly and often-unnoticed employment-related compliance obligations.

Read the article.