

GE Healthcare Hires Former Raytheon Lawyer as General Counsel

“General Electric Co. said Monday that Frank Jimenez will become general counsel for its health care business Feb. 21, succeeding its recently departed legal chief. Jimenez, who stepped down in December after two years as general counsel for what is now Raytheon Technologies Corp., will become leader,” reports Brian Baxter in Bloomberg Law.

“He takes over for Michael McAlevey, who spent 24 years in a variety of roles within the GE conglomerate. McAlevey left earlier this year to become chief legal officer for HCA Healthcare Inc., a Nashville, Tenn.-based operator of health care facilities. Boston-based GE unveiled plans in November to split itself into three separate companies.”

Read the article.