GSA Contractor Assistance Visits to Include Labor Category Qualifications Review

Baker Tilly has posted an article and video on several changes the U.S. General Services Administration has announced for the Contractor Assistance Visits (CAVs) performed by its Industrial Operations Analysts (IOAs).

On its website, Baker Tilly says that what amounts to perhaps the biggest change yet, IOAs will review task orders issued under GSA professional services contracts to ensure that the resources performing work on GSA orders meet minimum labor category qualifications, was announced in the fall 2014 issue of "GSA Steps."

"While this announcement serves as specific notice to GSA Schedule contractors to pay credence to the way the price, sell, and staff their projects, it also speaks to a broader trend that all professional services contractors should be aware of: the Government is paying close attention to the services that it buys, and the Government's enforcement community is focusing in on the qualifications of the resources providing those services as well as the pricing of those services," the firm says on its website.

Read the article and watch the video.