

Hayes Agrees to Franchise-Record Deal, exits with Minor Forearm Issue

"The starting pitchers started to applaud, which began to ring through Busch Stadium's visiting clubhouse, at which point, Cole Tucker began yelling out, "Rich guy! Rich guy Ke'Bryan Hayes started laughing, in the same understated, collective manner he always keeps. According to a source, the Pirates," reports Alex Stumpf in DK Pittsburgh Sports.

"Their starting third baseman are in agreement on an eight-year, $70 million contract, plus a club option for a ninth year. It's the largest term and amount in franchise history, finally surpassing the six-year, $60 million contract Jason Kendall signed Nov. 18, 2000. In my eyes, it shows how much they believe in me with what little time I have in the."
