

Hogan Lovells Expands its Litigation Team With 4 New Partners

Washington, D.C., April 2, 2025—Hogan Lovells has welcomed Gary Orseck, William Trunk, Jennifer Windom, and Matthew Madden as litigation partners in its Washington, D.C. office. The group joins from Kramer Levin and brings extensive experience handling high-stakes commercial litigation across industries, including health care, financial services, private capital, and professional services.

“We are excited to welcome Gary, Bill, Jen, and Matt to Hogan Lovells,” said Des Hogan, Global Practice Group Leader of the firm’s Litigation, Arbitration, and Employment practice. “They are nationally recognized litigators whose addition strengthens what is already one of the most formidable litigation teams in the country. Our practice is busier than ever following a record-breaking year, and their support will be invaluable to our clients.”

Adam K. Levin, Americas Litigation Practice Area Leader, added, “We’ve known Gary and his team for years. Their track record in complex business litigation ranges from securities class actions to enforcement matters. It aligns seamlessly with our strengths in sectors like health care, life sciences, and financial services.”

About the New Partners:

Gary Orseck previously served as Co-Managing Partner of Kramer Levin’s D.C. office and chaired its Litigation Practice. He has led the defense in multibillion-dollar securities class actions and represented major players in health care, hedge funds, banking, and accounting. Orseck is a founder of Robbins, Russell, Englert, Orseck & Untereiner LLP and a former DOJ's Civil Division attorney. He regularly defends clients in investigations by the SEC and the PCAOB.

William Trunk handles complex commercial litigation for corporations, hedge funds, and financial institutions. His experience includes federal and state trials, U.S. Supreme Court advocacy, and appeals in multiple Circuit Courts. He frequently advises on disputes from liability management, refinancing transactions, and derivative and fiduciary duty claims.

Jennifer Windom co-lead Kramer Levin's D.C. office and Health Care Practice Group. She represents clients in civil litigation, securities disputes, and government investigations. Her work focuses on highly regulated public health, government contracting, and finance sectors. She frequently handles matters that involve overlapping civil, criminal, and regulatory risks.

Matthew Madden focuses on high-stakes litigation and appeals related to bankruptcy, investment disputes, and securities class actions. He has represented creditors and debtors in complex reorganizations, defended public companies and executives in class actions, and advised clients as litigation and investigation counsel.

"We're excited to join Hogan Lovells," said Orseck. "The firm's global reach, litigation leadership, and strong regulatory and corporate practices make it the ideal platform for serving our clients' most critical business challenges."

Ajay Kuntamukkala, Office Managing Partner in Washington, D.C., noted, "Gary, Bill, Jen, and Matt are well-respected in the D.C. legal community, and we're proud to have them on board. The D.C. office remains a growth priority—it's one of our oldest, largest, and most vital to the firm's success."

About Hogan Lovells' Washington, D.C. Office

Founded in 1904, Hogan Lovells' Washington, D.C. office is the firm's largest U.S. location and home to over 500 attorneys. The office offers deep regulatory insight and strong litigation capabilities. It covers three core areas: Corporate and Finance, Global Regulatory and IP, Litigation, Arbitration, and Employment. It is located at the intersection of business and government. The team helps clients navigate complex legal and political challenges across various industries.